

She eats a hot dog in Central Park - but throws the roll away. She fights weight by concentrating on steak, liver, vegetable. She has a set of bar bells, says, "I don't lift them. I just exercise with them."

In country, she feeds dates to her lost dog, Hugo. The summer, she and Miller lived alone on a Long Island farm except for occasional visits from Miller's young son and daughter. "His son is just me," she says. "I can let home run."

She gives husband a "full later" kiss as she leaves to shop. In the city, they are always recognized and hailed, unless they adopt her favorite disguise. She proudly wears his horn-rimmed glasses.

MMLLC (Shaw) 000560

In country, she feeds calves to her bassett hound Hugo. This summer, she and Miller lived alone on a long Island farm, except for occasional visits from Miller's young son and daughter. "His son respects me," she says. "I can hit home runs."

continued

She eats a hot dog in Central Park—Jim throws the ball away. She fights weight by concentrating on steak, liver, vegetables. She has a set of bar bells. "Yes, I don't lift them, I just exercise with them."

She gives husband a "full liver" kiss, as she leaves to sleep. In the city, they are always recognized and hailed, unless they adopt her favorite disguise. She primly wears his horn-rimmed glasses.

MMLLC (Shaw) 000561

In country, she looks disposes to her latest bound. Hugo, this woman, she said Miller lived alone on a long island farm, except for occasional visits from Miller's young son and daughter. "His son respects me," she says. "I can tell him my name."

he gives husband a "will later" kiss, as she leaves to sleep. In the city, they are always recognized and hailed unless they adopt a favorite disguise. She primly wears his hornrimmed glasses.

MMLLC (Shaw) 000562

MARILYN'S NEW LIFE continued

Marilyn has nicknames but "comes running to anything"

"We live on the 13th floor in our apartment house," Marilyn says, "and that's exactly our attitude toward life."

Those closest to Marilyn say that she is not likely to dwell on the bitterness of losing her first baby after a short pregnancy. She will instead calmly plan to have another. As for her husband's legal problems, these may soon be resolved. Miller is appealing his contempt-of-congress conviction after receiving a suspended one-month jail sentence. He says "I am fighting for my life," and is determined to clear his name if he can.

All summer, except for Marilyn's ten-day hospitalization, the Millers lived in a farmhouse in Amagatsett, a village on the tip of Long Island.

They went fishing and swimming, driving along the deserted beaches and the back-country roads in their jeep. "We even got along in a car," Marilyn says. "He drives, but doesn't have any sense of direction. I do. I remember the way we came from, and that's how we go back. He calls me 'Flo,' 'Detection Finder,' among other things. His other names for me are 'Penny Dreadful,' 'Gimmey 5' and 'Sugar Emory'—all very literary. Actually, I come running to anything. I call him 'Art' or 'Poppy.' If I'm mad, I call him 'Arthur'."

"When she calls me 'Arthur,' I know I haven't been working hard enough," Miller says. "She's a demon about my work, and expects me to put in regular hours." For his writing this new play will be produced by all-white work houses—"everybody made one after another in the center of a working town. Most of the with their next near Roxbury, "in absolutely with a view of you faint And by." And Mili where we hope

Surf-casting Miller few is his mind on his work. He says that he has gained 25 pounds since marriage.

Wife shops for her husband's clothes (size 44). He hates to go shopping. "He has long legs that go on forever," she says. "He has only two suits—the one he got married in, and the other one."

They enjoy life most in the country, alone. Every body speaks based on how Miller might change. Marlin's during marriage. Now life friends say she's changed him—into a fun-loving human being.

Absorbed father, walking the baby, acts a New Yorker's treat, catching one of the sights of the town strolling along with her husband.

be produced this fall. Marilyn prepared a Spartan all-white work cottage, adjoining their country house—"everything white except the typewriter." She made one widely concession: a cot for a nap after exhausting labor. "His work will always be the center of our lives," she says. "But I'll keep on working too, I'm not retired yet."

Most of their plans at present are concerned with their next home. It will be a 200-acre farm near Roxbury, Conn. Marilyn says they will build an absolutely modern, stark-raving-mad house, with a view of mountain ridges that would make you faint. And private? Not even an airplane gives by. And Miller adds soberly, "It's the place where we hope to live until we die."

MMLLC (Shaw) 000565

Absorbed father, walking the baby, gets a New Yorker's treat: catching one of the glances of the town strolling along with her husband.

he produced this fall. Marilyn prepared a Spartan all-white work cottage adjoining their country house — everything white except the typewriter. She made one witty concession, a cot for a nap after exhausting labor. "His work will always be the center of our lives," she says. "But I'll keep on working too. I'm not retired yet."

Most of their plans at present are concerned with their next home. It will be a 200-acre farm near Roxbury, Conn. Marilyn says they will build an absolutely modern, stark-raving mad house, with a view of mountain ridges that would make you faint. And private! Not even an airplane police. And Miller adds soberly, "It's the place where we hope to live until we die."

MARILYN'S NEW LIFE continued

ing and signing autograph.

Rowing on Central Park lake, she maneuvers boat as deftly as a sailor. She and husband also go bierching in the park.

"I ate again!" says Marilyn, trying to get into Tiffany's. Her only jewelry is her wedding ring, this favorite dress of hers cost $5.99

"Yes, we knew who she was," said this couple in Central Park. "We didn't intrude because she was reading her newspaper."

END

MMLLC (Shaw) 000567

Cooling off in the Plaza fountain, she invited everybody to join her, but they were too a-tout-hed to do anything but watch. Then she sat at water's edge.

Marilyn enjoyed capering like a frisky beginner again

From the security of her marriage, Marilyn has regained the sense of fun that once made her the most-quoted pinup girl in the world. The pictures on these pages were taken the night before her high-brow movie, The Prince and the Showgirl, opened in New York. The following night, she was the guest of honor of the city's notables at a high-society charity benefit. But now she walked in and around Central Park with all the friskiness of a newly discovered actress, followed by immense throngs of people. She even wanted to saunter down Times Square, wearing a sandwich sign reading: "Don't eat at Sam's Diner. Come and see me at Radio City Music Hall." Then she pressed and said: "But that might make Sir Laurence Olivier drop his monocle."

Marilyn now says of her life, "If I'd observed all the rules, I'd never have got anywhere." She has shown that acting can't spoil Marilyn Monroe, and that her marriage to an intellectual playwright has every chance of being an enduring one, in spite of all predictions of disaster.

What does it feel like to be married to Marilyn Monroe? "Well, now kids in the street, and newspaper photographers call me 'Arthur,'" says Miller. "It's impossible to have a sympathetic relationship with her. She's too honest and earthy for anything phony. She has an enormous sense of play, inventiveness—and unexpectedness—not only as a wife but as an actress. She could never be dull. I took her as a serious actress even before I met her. I think she's an adroit comedienne, but I also think she might turn into the greatest tragic actress that can be imagined. But let me add: She can be a bad actress as far as I'm concerned, and I can still love her."

Marilyn says her new husband is the first man who hasn't become exasperated with her for being late. "At least I was on time for the wedding." While Marilyn goes through her four-hour ritual for getting ready to go out, Miller will wait comfortably, reading and puffing on his pipe. He once told her mildly that if she didn't wear any make-up, she would still look good to him. But Marilyn, like most famous beauties, feels insecure about her looks. She has a slight bump on the tip of her nose, for instance, that she takes endless pains in crasing with make-up.

Her next movie may be a remake of the German film The Blue Angel, an early Marlene Dietrich role. But she must go slowly. When she was filming her movie in England, she was urged by the Queen's physician to take a year's complete rest. That's another reason why their new house in Connecticut and a "long honeymoon" are so important to them.

